Recruiting Project Managers

Learning Objectives: Enabling Recruiters to select the most suitable candidate and facilitating potential candidates in the recruitment process

Neelov has long years of experience as Project/ Program manager and during this period he has recruited, trained and mentored a large number of project managers. Because of his vast experience in diversified IT projects he has extensive exposure to the real life situations that the project managers have to deal with in their day to day practice. The theoretical knowledge helps the PM to know the basics but the practical experience makes him seasoned in applying appropriate theories for appropriate situations to make the project a success.

Neelov is introducing a new concept “Situational Analysis” that will change the recruitment process to make it more efficient and effective. This tool also can be used as a training media that will help the PMs in relating the practical life situations with the project management concepts.

Neelov also believes that an individual’s success as PM depends on the person’s personality. A potential PM should be aware of his/her personality type so that he/she can work on weak areas but at the same time be conscious about their strength.

Session Duration: 8 hours

Audience: Recruiters and Potential Project Managers

1. Recruiting Process
2. Real life application of PMBOK Knowledge Areas
3. Other Knowledge Areas not covered by PMBOK, but equally important for a PM’s day to day operations
4. Behavioral questions – a tool to assess KSA
5. PM Competencies
6. PM Personality Type

This is a very interactive session, packed with videos, role plays and active interactions with the participants. This session has been presented in various forums and got very high rating.

Participants will receive some samples of “Situational Analysis”.

Every participant will earn 30 minutes of mentoring session with Neelov
